

A Sanders-of-the-River touch: East African Students tour Mombasa harbour during a visit to the Coast sponsored by the Shell Company.

President Nnamdi Azikiwe, often described as the "Father of Nigerian Journalism", cuts a tape to inaugurate the IPI lecture rooms at the University of Lagos. With him is Bill Crampton, in charge of the Lagos course.

Inside the completed classroom: Bill Crampton discusses a piece of copy with one of the students. Nearest camera is Hamidu Gusau (Daily Mail). The sole woman in the group is Elizabeth Olumuyiwa (The Sunday Times).

Patrick Duncan, son of a former South African Governor General, and now a leading opponent of apartheid, was among the many visitors who lectured East African students.

IPI in Africa

*In Lagos and Nairobi journalism teaching
takes the students
beyond the classroom*

On the job: Bayo Durosinlorun (Northern Nigeria Information Service), Oji Ibekwe (Nigerian Outlook) and David Abili (Daily Telegraph) interview a factory worker as part of their training at the IPI centre in Lagos.

How does it work? Stanley Bonnett accompanies Nigerian journalist-students as they learn how oils are mixed at a major installation in Lagos.

Autograph hunters: After dinner with Kenya's Governor General, Mr. Malcolm MacDonald, students of the East and Central African IPI course collected his autograph.

Chief Lecturer Frank Barton looks as puzzled as some of the students on an industrial visit — to a brewery!
